GREAT PLANNING OUTCOMES

A comprehensive financial plan for you and your family should do one, some or all of the below:

- If a breadwinner dies, your family will not be fatally compromised. They will be able to stay in their home, plans to help your children will remain on track, business interests can continue, assets will not have to be sold in a fire sale.
- The same goes in the event of disability or long-term illness.
- The children and/or grandchildren can be helped with education costs, deposits for homes, etc., without being saddled with debt.
- The current generation will be able to retire in their own time and on their own terms. They will be confident they will not outlive their income. Their dignity and independence will not be undermined by up to thirty years of rising living costs (aka inflation).
- The current generation will be able to support their own parents. And never become a burden to their children.
- Retirement incomes will rise to offset inflation. This will not be at the expense of the capital that will also grow over time and be available to support future generations.
- Inheritance tax (IHT) will not force the sale of important assets at an inopportune time. IHT liabilities will be funded out of residual capital, or insured against.
